

3 arrested by Ravenna Police on 21 counts

By KYLE WOOSLEY

KPA Summer Intern

The Ravenna Police Department has three Estill County residents and three juveniles with 21 charges against them for crimes in Ravenna that took place in June.

On June 16, Eddie Sizemore, 19, of Walnut Grove, allegedly assisted a juvenile in causing damages to three different household properties.

Sizemore had taken a knife and cut 15 holes in a pool on Elm Street owned by Kevin Hardy, 33. He is being charged with second degree criminal mischief and third degree unlawful transaction with a minor.

Ravenna Police Department Chief Ken White said the juvenile admitted to stabbing the pool six times, but claimed Sizemore did the rest.

Sizemore and the juvenile allegedly pulled up multiple tomato plants on Sixth Street belonging to Larry Henry, 65. For this crime, Sizemore is being charged with third degree criminal mischief and unlawful transaction with a minor.

The two then threw trash in a swimming pool on Poplar Street owned by Vickie Horn, 30. Sizemore is being charged with third degree criminal mischief and unlawful transaction with a minor.

Sizemore was also involved with a burglary on Daniel's Addition. He assisted Martina Nunnally, 18, of Walnut Grove, Timmy Bishop, 19, of Noland Court, and two other juveniles.

On June 24, the five unlawfully entered the home of Ida Murphy, 47, and stole several items.

White said one of the juveniles went through an unsecured window in Murphy's home and let the others in. One person stood as look out while the other four raided the home for valuables.

The stolen property includes three necklaces, home-rolled cigarettes, a pocket knife, digital camera, three lighters and a black onyx ring. White said some of the items have since been recovered.

"Hopefully we can get restitution back for her [Murphy]," White said.

Sizemore and Bishop are being charged with second degree burglary, receiving stolen property under $10,000 and two counts of unlawful transaction with a minor.

Bishop is also being charged with possession of marijuana. Bond was set at $10,000 cash.

HANDS program expands support

By WHITNEY LEGGETT

Pregnancy and parenthood can be stressful and overwhelming. Parents are often left with questions and concerns that often go unanswered.

The Estill County Health Department is now able to offer extended services to families with infants and young children through a support program.

The Health Access Nurturing Development Services (HANDS) program is a program for parents that provides services from the prenatal period until the child's third birthday.

HANDS is designed to ease the stresses of parents with infants and toddlers and to offer answers to questions parents have about raising healthy families.

The program was previously available for only first-time mothers and fathers, but can now be extended to all parents no matter the number of children.

This means that mothers and fathers can participate in the program as they prepare for second, third or more children.

"Before we couldn't see a second child," HANDS Coordinator Becky

Crawford said.

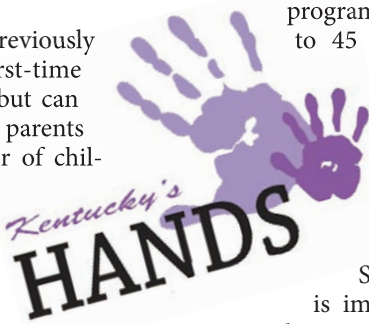

In Estill County the HANDS program has approximately 40 to 45 families that participate.

Crawford said, on average, contact is made with 75 families per year through the program.

She said this program is important for the community because of the level of support that is offered at a critical time for any family.

Estill, 26 other counties included on water shortage watch

By WHITNEY LEGGETT

CV&T News Editor

Estill is one of 27 counties included on a water shortage watch list issued by the Energy and Environment Cabinet (EEC) last week.

The water shortage follows several weeks of record breaking temperatures that soared above 100 degrees.

The high temperatures and lack of rain lead to drought conditions prompting burn bans, heat advisories and now, water shortage watches, across the state.

According to a press release issued last week, "A water shortage watch is issued when drought conditions have the potential to threaten the normal availability of drinking water supply sources."

Estill County Judge-Executive Wallace Taylor said the county is constantly monitoring extreme conditions due to the weather.

He said this week he has been consulting with Estill County Fire Chief Derrick Muncie and Bee Williams of Irvine Municipal Utilities.

"High temperatures combined with precipitation deficits frequently create surges in the demand for water, often exceeding a water supplier's ability to meet that demand," the press release said.

TIPS TO CONSERVE WATER

See page A2.

However, Taylor reported water consumption was down this week from previous weeks in the county.

He said the plant can distribute at most two million gallons of water a day. In previous weeks the plant was distributing 1.7 million gallons per day.

The last report Taylor received was 1.6 million gallons being used.

Taylor said the average use is in the range of 1.4 million to 1.5 million gallons per day.

Although, consumption is above average, Taylor said the plant is not being overly labored and the flow of water into the plant has actually increased because of some rainfall in Eastern Kentucky.

Taylor said the biggest concern for the people of Estill County should be the potential for worsening conditions later in the year.

"The first few days of July have been bad," he said. "The dry period usually doesn't hit until August or September."

The Estill County Adult Education Center was broken into over the Fourth of July weekend. A computer, document writer and jar of money were stolen.

Adult Education Center burglarized over holiday weekend

By KYLE WOOSLEY

KPA Summer Intern

Several items were stolen from the Estill County Adult Education Center over the Fourth of July weekend.

Items stolen from the Center include a Dell laptop computer, projector, Elmo document writer and a money jar containing anywhere from $5 to $20. Irvine City Police Chief Brad Smith said the estimated value of all of the stolen items is no less than $1,500.

Smith said he has checked around to find the stolen property, but has been unable to locate any of the items. The crime occurred sometime between the afternoon of July 4 and the morning of July 9.

Smith said anywhere from one to two people broke in through the back of the building.

"The back screen had been cut and the window had been busted open," Smith said.

Smith said the person behind the robbery is taking advantage of the Center and the services it provides.

"The Adult Education Center is a good asset to the community," Smith said. "They do GED courses and help others further their education. For somebody to take items that are required to do that from this place, it is unacceptable."

Despite being unable to locate any of the stolen property, Smith said the department remains interested in the case.

"We are highly interested in who did it so we can prosecute them," Smith said.

The Center was unable to comment on the robbery at this time.

The perpetrator will be charged with third degree burglary and criminal mischief. If you have any information on the robbery, please contact the Irvine Police Department.

Irvine City Council hears information about CEDA

By WHITNEY LEGGETT
CV&T News Editor

The Irvine City Council heard information about beginning the process of a housing rehabilitation project through Community & Economic Development Associates (CEDA).

CEDA President Bryan Kirby told the council there are a variety of grant funds available through the Commonwealth of Kentucky.

He used the City of Ravenna as an example of a successful CEDA housing project.

For over a year CEDA has assisted the Ravenna City Council with facilitating the rehabilitation and construction of eight homes.

Kirby said the grant program is typically used to build or rehabilitate homes for the elderly and/or physically disabled.

The program is there to make homes more handicap accessible and to add necessary amenities for homeowners.

The City of Irvine and its councilmembers would act as sponsors for the program and would also be responsible for facilitating the use of the grant money.

Kirby described the process as competitive but told the council his team has a greater than 99 percent success rate with the projects they had presented to the Department of Local Government for grant funding.

Kirby asked the council to allow his firm to issue an advertisement in the community for the project so that all interested homeowners could begin the process of applying for the project.

CEDA would look at the homes of all those interested and begin to choose homes that would be grouped together for the first phase of the project.

He said one important criteria is that homeowners must be low-income.

The council decided to wait to discuss the matter further with County Attorney Rodney Davis and plan to meet to with Kirby at a later date to make a decision about beginning the project.

Also present as a guest at the meeting was Jim Walters.

Walters had previously addressed the council about passing a curfew ordinance that would apply to people under the age of 18.

The council decided not to act on passing such an ordinance and Walters had previously called for the council members and the mayor to resign.

He made a similar request at the most recent meeting.

Walters was present initially to ask the council about an overgrown property on High Street. He was concerned that the property owner was breaking a city ordinance that places height limits on overgrowth on property.

He said his wife's parents live on the property next door to the overgrowth and have been requesting the city do something for over 10 years.

"I heard from a prominent business man that the mayor won't do anything about this because he is worried about losing votes," Walters said.

The property owner lives in Waco.

"If you're going to lose votes it will be in Irvine, not Waco," Walters said.

Walters then requested the council and the mayor resign calling them all "incapable and incompetent."

Walters' discussion and attacks on the council prompted Irvine Mayor Earnest Farmer to call order to the meeting. He told Walters that they have taken into consideration each of his requests and the council would discuss his suggestions as many times as he would like. He also said he would not allow him to continue to disrespect and attack the councilmembers and himself.

"If you think you can do better, run for council yourself," Farmer said.

Irvine Division of Police Chief Brad Smith said he had sent letters to the property owner in the past and would prepare another letter to be sent within the week.

The councilmembers agreed the property needed to be cleaned up and asked Walters to give them until the next council meeting to take care of the issue.

"We're not trying to make excuses," Councilman Tobo Bryant said. "The property needs to be cleaned up. We are glad you brought it to our attention. This is an ongoing battle in the city."

In other business:

- Farmer told the council a burn ban was still in effect in the city.
- Farmer reported the city workers have cut the grass, cleaned out an alley and worked on the streets and drains.
- Councilman Billy Arthur told the council the man who had previously inquired about purchasing the old city hall had found a different property in which to open his business. The business owner had planned to open a Carquest in the building. He told Arthur he may still be interested in the property for another purpose and would contact the council in the future.

The next scheduled meeting of the Irvine City Council is Monday, June 23.

He said while there has been very little short-term impact in terms of water supply, people should still be concerned and cautious about the long-term impact.

Kentuckians in those counties listed on on the water shortage watch list are asked to "increase their awareness of the current drought situation and prepare to make adjustments to their water use."

are exciting," she said. "We are there to give encouragement. New [parents] are uncertain sometimes about how well they are doing."

Crawford said the program is designed to offer resources, support and encouragement for new parents through home visits with HANDS workers.

"It's nice to have someone come into the home and tell a parent they're doing a good job," she said.

Crawford said the opportunity for parents with multiple children to participate in the program will benefit the community and families already participating greatly.

"This change is beneficial because it expands support for families," she said.

"There is a big shift taking place in families when a second child is on the way."

Estill County has two home visitors, Teresa Talbott and Nivra Lainhart, who make trips to homes and bring homemade toys with them, along with information about resources and development.

These trained home visitors go into the homes to help parents development important skills in areas like recognizing a baby's needs, what to expect as a baby grows and how to make a home safe for an infant or toddler.

Parents have until a child is three months old to enroll in the program.

Families are screened after a referral is made, according to the Kentucky Cabinet for Health and Family Services (KCHFS).

Studies show the benefits of the program shorter showers and only running dishwasher or clothes washers when there is a full load.

The EEC encourages those with concerns and questions to contact their local health department.

Tips to reduce water use:

Avoid running the water while brushing your teeth, shaving or washing your face.

Avoid using the garbage disposal.

Avoid washing your car.

Completely load dishwashers and clothes washers prior to operation.

"We are there to give encouragement. New parents are uncertain sometimes about how well they are doing."

extend much further than encouragement and support.

KCHFS reports, "Families who participated in HANDS (compared to families who did not participate) experienced fewer premature infants, fewer low birth weight babies, fewer very low birth weight babies and fewer developmental delays. Studies have shown families that participate in HANDS in the first trimester experience even fewer incidents of the above."

The program can begin before a child is even born and allows mothers and fathers to "learn more about having a healthy pregnancy, caring for their baby, how to bond with their child, how to provide their children with enriching learning experiences, creating a safe and healthy home, community resources and child development."

Crawford said the program is open to parents of all incomes and ages.

New law creates more obstacles for consumers

There are no doubt serious consequences associated with methamphetamine and the growing use of the drug.

This is why Gov. Steve Beshear signed a bill into law last year that drastically limits the sale of pseudoephedrine, a key ingredient in meth.

The new law limits those purchasing over-the-counter cold medicines that contain pseudoephedrine to no more than two boxes per month.

The law goes into effect today, meaning sales of popular allergy and sinus medications like Advil Cold & Sinus, Claritin-D and Sudafed are now more strictly monitored than ever before.

As a former pharmacy technician, I can easily see the positive and negative aspects of the new law.

WHITNEY LEGGETT
CV&T News Editor

Meth is clearly a growing problem in Kentucky, and this law has the potential to reduce the number of meth labs dramatically.

Law enforcement agencies in the state reported more than 1,000 meth labs being discovered in 2010.

However, there is a reason the law faced resistance in the General Assembly: it places unnecessary obstacles in the way of responsible consumers seeking relief for cold symptoms.

At my former job, I ran into shoppers buying these pseudoephedrine products for their intended use who are burdened by needing to show an ID, signing for the product and often being turned away because of regulations on a daily basis.

Previously, those purchasing pseudoephedrine products are limited to 3.6 grams in one day and nine grams in a month and were required have their personal information logged into a computerized database.

To put the whole issue into perspective, think in terms of a family of four. Imagine this family consists of a mother, father and two teenage children.

If all four members of the family need pseudoephedrine products to treat their symptoms, the new law makes it difficult for this family to obtain enough medication to treat all of them. The teenage children are old enough to take the medication but not to purchase it for themselves.

"The laws and regulations are simply another punishment on the everyday person based on the irresponsible nature of the few."

Some would argue this family should simply go to a doctor and get prescriptions. But doctor's appointments cost money or require health insurance, which also costs money.

Over-the-counter cold medications with pseudoephedrine in them are much less expensive than a doctor's visit and can be purchased as soon as symptoms appear. If a prescription were required, people would often need to wait several days in order to get a doctor's appointment and then have the prescription filled.

It's easy to begin to see the number of obstacles consumers have to overcome in order to do something that should be simple: feel better.

Yes, meth labs are a growing problem. But so is prescription drug abuse.

Requiring a prescription for pain medications has not prevented "pill mills," trips to other states for easier access to the medication or devastating effects on the people in our state.

This is why the previous limitations were more than enough. The previous laws restricted the quantity of pseudoephedrine products sold to the individual, but make it relatively easy to find relief.

The law and regulations are simply another punishment on the everyday person based on the irresponsible nature of the few.

Legalized marijuana could bring Kentucky much needed economic boost

By KYLE WOOSLEY
KPA Summer Intern

There is one controversial issue in our country today that has always managed to catch attention in the media: the legalization of marijuana.

When it comes to developing a strong opinion on the subject, I'm often torn between what's best for our struggling economy and the social consequences of it.

If you were to ask me this time last year if marijuana should be legal, I would answered quickly with a stern, yet simple, "No."

The reasons my feelings toward the subject were as strong as they were was because I was purely thinking about the negative social consequences associated with marijuana use.

I had always considered marijuana a gateway drug and another meaningless addiction for people to waste their money on.

Recently, I read an article online about the development of a potential law that would legalize medical marijuana in Kentucky. In the article, I came across a very interesting point that had never crossed my sociological way of thinking before. The climate in Kentucky is perfect for growing and manufacturing marijuana plants.

Suddenly I found myself thinking of the issue from an economic standpoint, rather than a social standpoint. If we legalized marijuana, just imagine the sheer number of jobs that could be created in Kentucky alone, not to mention other states with a similar climate. It could be just the boom our economy needs to get back into good, or at least acceptable, standing.

My opinion on so-called "medical" marijuana, however, remains the same. Just because you have some sort of chronic back pain or migraines does not mean you need to light one up like a teenager in the 70s. It's not going to help anything. That's what Tylenol is for.

If you're going to smoke pot, at least admit the real reason why you're doing it. That's like people who say they smoke cigarettes because it relieves stress, when really they're just addicted to it and can't quit.

There are some cases, like people with cancer or other deathly illnesses, who I feel should be able to smoke marijuana. The people are dying. If they want to smoke a joint, then who I am to tell them no? If I was in their situation, then I would do it too.

Though legalizing marijuana, medical or otherwise, would create job growth and boost the economy, particularly in our area, I still find it difficult to ignore the social problems that come with it.

Up until this past semester at school, I had never associated with anyone who smoked marijuana. But when I began to hang out with them, I could see firsthand just what legalizing marijuana could mean.

One of these friends, which I so cleverly dubbed the "pot posse," also challenged me on my stern opinions on the topic.

He claimed to not be addicted to marijuana and that it was not a gateway drug, and that he only smoked because it made him feel a little better about life.

Despite his best claims, I later discovered he had tried multiple other drugs and learned he smoked at least three times per week. But I had to also note that he is one of the happiest and most friendly people I have ever met.

We can't ignore the negative social consequences of marijuana use, but we also can't ignore the state of our economy.

My personal opinion is marijuana is not a terrible thing. If it can make a person feel a little better, have a little fun and boost the economy, then what's the harm? We have alcohol and cigarettes for that too, don't we?

Perhaps when it comes to the topic of marijuana we need a little more education and a little less personal judgment.

They said it...

Hollon is new 4-H agent

The new 4-H Agent for Estill County spent his first week on the job tackling the events at the county fair.

Isaac Hollon, a Wolfe County native, was hired this summer to replace the former 4-H agent, Candrea Johnson.

Johnson moved on to a different position leaving the position open for Hollon who said the transition has gone well.

Hollon graduated with a bachelor's of science in family environmental studies from Marshall University in West Virginia.

Hollon said he "just kind fell into" his interest in the 4-H program.

He didn't participate in the program until his high school years.

However, that was enough to establish an interest and appreciation for the impact 4-H has on communities.

Hollon worked as a summer intern at the University of Kentucky for two years and as a program assistant in Perry County for a year.

He said he is enjoying his new position and hopes to expand the current program.

"I want to continue with the ag, horticulture and crafts programs that are already in place," he said. "I also want to spread out into other areas."

Hollon said he is interested in adding family and consumers sciences, health and leadership areas to the program.

"I'm not going to take anything away that is already in place," he said. "I just want to add things to round the program out."

Hollon stressed the positive impact 4-H has on those young people involved.

"It gives kids a large amount of opportunities," he said.

Hollon said there is a huge variety of activities and seven core content areas 4-H focuses on.

"Every activity is about the kids learning skills," he said. "The whole program is education-based."

Bitterness in Cucumbers

Have you noticed that your cucumbers are a little (or a lot) bitter lately? Don't give up hope... a little water, mulch and patience will provide relief.

According to University horticulture specialists, most cucumber plants contain a bitter compound called cucurbitacin, which can be present in the fruit as well as the foliage. Bitterness in cucumbers tends to be more prominent when plants are under stress from low moisture, high temperatures or poor nutrition.

For some cucumber eaters, the bitter taste can be accompanied by a digestive discomfort known as a burp. Some of the newer cultivars of cucumbers do not have the bitter compound and, thus, no burp. So, some seed companies called their bitter-free cukes "burpless."

The amount of bitterness in the cucumber depends on the severity of the heat and drought. In most cases, cutting off the stem-end and removing the skin of bitter cucumbers will remove much of the bitterness. Some fruits will be bitter all the way through and should be discarded. Bitter cucumbers will not taste any better when pickled.

Watering during droughty periods to provide 1 to 1 1/2 inches of water in a single application will help keep bitterness out of subsequent fruits.

Apply a mulch, such as straw, shredded bark or newspaper, to help cool the soil, conserve moisture and keep weeds under control.

Next year, it is best to plant bitter-free cultivars and provide optimum growing conditions, when possible. Many cultivars are listed as being bitter-free, including Carmen, County Fair, Diva, Green Knight, Sweet Slice, Sweet Success and Tasty Green. New cultivars arrive each year, so be sure to read through next season's garden catalogs and web sites to find the bitter-free types.

For more information on gardening, contact the Estill County Extension Office at 606-723-4557. Educational programs of the Kentucky Cooperative Extension Service serve all people regardless of race, color, age, sex, religion, disability or national origin.

Ravenna Officer Gross to be school resource officer

By KYLE WOOSLEY
KPA Summer Intern

Ravenna was awarded James Gross' contract as the school resource officer in the Estill County school system.

Even though Gross is no stranger to Estill County's police system or the school he remains ecstatic to be involved.

"I'm tickled to death," he said.

Gross has worked for both the Ravenna and Irvine police departments, and even served as police chief for the Irvine Police Department.

He has also worked as a court-designated worker and has been the Estill County school resource officer for five years.

But when the county opened up his contract for bids, Ravenna ended up getting it.

"The school opened the contract up for bids and everybody bid and Ravenna ended up with the best contract," he said.

Gross said he could not be happier to be working with the children of Estill County again.

"I look forward to going back and working with the kids and all the people at the school," he said. "I appreciate Ravenna and all the effort put into the program."

As the school resource officer, Gross is responsible for investigating crimes at or involving the county's schools. He is also in charge of patrolling the school grounds and teaches drug education courses.

Even though Gross is no stranger to the job, he said he is always trying to improve.

"I'm always trying to improve on everything," Gross said. "Ken White and myself are going to have a meeting with the school to see if they have anything they want to change or add."

Ravenna City Police Chief Ken White said he is happy to have someone of Gross' experience working with his department.

"I'm extremely proud to have a person of his experience working here," White said. "It will be good for the community."

Citizens express concern about trailer ordinance in Ravenna

By KYLE WOOSLEY
KPA Summer Intern

A special meeting of the Ravenna City Council led to a heavy discussion about a trailer ordinance.

When Othal and Hazel Dawson asked about why their Poplar Street trailer was being cited, Councilman James Richardson called it a direct violation of the ordinance.

"It's been there all these years," Hazel Dawson said. "We've never lived in them but we rented them out."

James Richardson read the ordinance and said the way he understood it the owner must live in the trailer and it cannot be rented out.

"If the landowner put a trailer in and rented it out, they violated the ordinance right there," James Richardson said.

After Hazel Dawson said the trailer had been at the location for up to 17 years, the council decided to discuss the grandfather rule. In this case, the grandfather rule would be any trailer that was placed before the ordinance was passed.

"The way I understand the ordinance is when the ordinance is violated, the grandfather rights go away," James Richardson said.

Ravenna Fire Chief David Harvey said the grandfather rule should still apply to trailers that were there before the ordinance was passed.

"When the new ordinance was actually designed it was for new trailers," Harvey said. "We were grandfathered into that old ordinance."

Harvey compared the situation to someone moving out of their home and wanting to rent it out.

"If you moved out of your house today, you'd be able to want to rent it wouldn't you?" Harvey said. "I don't see how the ordinance is not picking someone out and discriminating against them."

Councilwoman Joan Richardson said she believes the city has too many ordinances they're not keeping track of as it is.

"We have so many ordinances we're not abiding by," Richardson said. "I think people are getting aggravated that we're not going by what we have. We don't want to point our fingers at different people."

The council eventually approved a motion to start from scratch and redo their trailer ordinance at the next meeting.

Betty Bryant, of Fourth Street, came to ask the council to grant her permission to finish her work on the sidewalk outside of her home.

"I fell and hurt myself really bad," Bryant said. "I busted both of my knees, face and everything."

After falling and injuring herself, Bryant began to cover the cracks in the sidewalk with dirt she had purchased. However, she was told by a Ravenna city official that it was against the law.

However, Mayor Charles Crowe expressed some concern about the location of the sewer drains in the area.

"I don't want to fall again and I don't want anyone else to get hurt," Bryant said. "I've got everything paid for and I just want to finish it up."

Joan Richardson said she has seen the work Bryant has done first-hand and thinks she should finish it.

The council then passed a motion to let Bryant keep the dirt on the sidewalk and finish the work she has already begun.

The council approved the second reading of the budget for the 2012-2013 fiscal year.

"This budget will be our working budget for the year," Crowe said.

The next meeting of the Ravenna City Council is scheduled for Monday, Aug. 2.

Witt graduates from Rogers Scholars youth leadership program

Estill County's Michael Witt has graduated from this summer's first class of The Center for Rural Development's 2012 Rogers Scholars youth leadership program.

The Rogers Scholars program—The Center's flagship youth program—provides leadership and exclusive scholarship opportunities for rising high school juniors in Southern and Eastern Kentucky and encourages graduates to build their careers in the region.

"Rogers Scholars was an experience of a lifetime," said Witt, 16, a student at Estill County High School. "I got to meet people with great minds and skills and try new activities that I otherwise may not have had the resources to try."

The first summer session of Rogers Scholars was held June 24-29 on the grounds of The Center for Rural Development in Somerset.

Lonnie Lawson, president and CEO of The Center, and Delaney Stephens, youth programs coordinator and community liaison, presented certificates of recognition to the first class of Rogers Scholars graduates on the final day of the program during an awards ceremony and graduation program at The Center in Somerset.

"The Rogers Scholars program is changing the lives of young people all across Southern and Eastern Kentucky," Lawson said. "Rogers Scholars graduates—some of our best and brightest students in the region—are our future leaders and entrepreneurs and hope for a brighter tomorrow."

Students apply during their sophomore year and attend the Rogers Scholars program before the start of their junior year in high school.

The one-week summer youth leadership program gives students a chance to grow their leadership and entrepreneurial skills, learn from professional business leaders, and explore their interests in one of Rogers Scholars' three majors: engineering, video production, and healthcare.

Witt is the son of Greg and Lori Witt of Irvine.

Estill County student completes GSA Program

This summer the Kentucky Center welcomed over 200 eager young artists from every region of the Commonwealth, including Shelby Arthur of Estill County High School (Architecture), to the heart of the Bluegrass, as The Kentucky Center Governor's School for the Arts (GSA) celebrated its 25th anniversary at Lexington's Transylvania University from June 17 to July 7.

During their three-week stay, 225 student artists from 43 counties were immersed in a rigorous schedule of daily seminars, masterclasses, lectures, hands-on workshops and field trips to regional arts attractions.

Instruction was offered in nine disciplines: architecture, creative writing, dance, drama, instrumental music, musical theatre, new media, visual art and vocal music.

Since 1987, more than 4,200 talented high school sophomores and juniors have attended the GSA summer program. The program culminated on July 7 with an all-day festival that celebrated the achievements of Kentucky's young artists.

State Announces Water Shortage Watch for 27 Counties

Citizens urged to heed local water-use advisories

As a result of continuing high temperatures and limited rainfall, the Energy and Environment Cabinet today announced a water shortage watch for 27 counties in Kentucky. Citizens living in these areas should closely monitor local news sources for notification from water suppliers on reducing demands for water.

A Water Shortage Watch is issued when drought conditions have the potential to threaten the normal availability of drinking water supply sources. Officials at the Kentucky Division of Water (DOW) study rainfall amounts, reservoir levels, streamflows, the Palmer Drought Index and the Drought Monitor when determining drought status.

All Kentuckians should increase their awareness of the current drought situation and prepare to make adjustments to their water use.

The following counties, listed by Drought Management Area (DMA), meet the criteria to be included in the water watch:

Barren River DMA – Monroe, Simpson, Warren
Buffalo Trace DMA – Fleming, Robertson
Bluegrass DMA – Anderson, Bourbon, Clark, Estill, Fayette, Franklin, Garrard, Harrison, Jessamine, Lincoln, Madison, Mercer, Nicholas, Scott, Woodford
Cumberland Valley DMA – Whitley
Green River DMA – Webster
Kentucky River DMA – Lee, Owsley
Northern Kentucky DMA – Owen, Pendleton
Pennyrile DMA – Crittenden

High temperatures combined with precipitation deficits frequently create surges in the demand for water, often exceeding a water supplier's ability to meet that demand. Many communities in the Water Shortage Watch areas have issued local water advisories in response to unusually high demands and reduced raw water supplies. Citizens in the Water Shortage Watch areas should be prepared to reduce water use upon request by their local water supplier.

In areas not included in this Water Shortage Watch, water supply sources remain at acceptable levels, but capacity issues associated with high temperatures and dry conditions have prompted local water advisories in several counties. Citizens across the Commonwealth should heed local water suppliers' requests for water conservation when local advisories are issued.

In all areas of Kentucky, self-supplied individuals on wells or other small sources should avoid excessive water use and report losses of water supply to their county health department.

State climatologist Stuart Foster said "the combined impact of dry conditions and extremely hot temperatures at this time is causing a one-two punch."

"An exceptionally dry June throughout the state coupled with some record-high temperatures over the past week have caused drought conditions to intensify and spread eastward to cover most of Kentucky," said Foster. "The current situation is reminiscent of 1988, while there are some indications that persistence of the current hot and dry pattern that would trigger comparisons to droughts from the 1930s."

Agriculture has been particularly hard hit in western Kentucky counties.

"The timing of the drought on corn has already and will continue to reduce yields significantly," said University of Kentucky Agricultural Meteorologist Tom Priddy. "Doubled-cropped soybeans are having a difficult time with germination. Ponds are running low for irrigation purposes and watering of livestock. Western and central locations may be near the point where rain would provide little benefit for corn and soybean growth, development and yield."

DOW Drought Coordinator Bill Caldwell said public water suppliers play a vital role in helping drought specialists monitor the drought's progression.

"Water suppliers in the 27-county watch area and throughout the state should closely monitor their supply sources and notify the Division of Water if water shortages occur," said Caldwell.

Visit the Division of Water website at <http://water.ky.gov/wa/Pages/Drought.aspx> for information about current drought conditions in Kentucky and water conservation measures. Hospice Care Plus launches new in-house DME company in Berea Hospice Care Plus, based in Berea, Ky., has launched a new, in-house Durable Medical Equipment (DME) company.

The new DME company will serve only Hospice Care Plus patients and families in the six counties served by the organization: Estill, Jackson, Lee, Madison, Owsley and Rockcastle Counties.

It has been licensed by the Kentucky Board of Pharmacy and is in the process of earning Joint Commission accreditation.

According to Gail McGillis, CEO of Hospice Care Plus, the decision to create its own DME service was driven by cost-savings and customer service.

"We expect to realize an annual savings of $62,000," said McGillis. "Obviously, as a non-profit, that's very appealing to us. We can return those savings directly to our programs, which are offered regardless of ability to pay."

Those cost-savings even account for the expense of hiring new staff.

Hospice Care Plus's DME start-up required hiring a full-time DME manager, full-time DME driver, and a part-time DME driver to help cover weekends and evenings.

McGillis says the organization has always contracted with existing DME companies in its service area, and that all of them have been good partners. She adds, though, that "all of them have customers other than ours, so they can't be as timely in their response as we can be if we're only serving our own patients and families."

In the past, says McGillis, patients and families might wait for a day or two to get the supplies they need in their homes upon admission to hospice.

Also, when a patient dies, the caregiver is often frustrated if the equipment isn't immediately removed.

"Our goal with the new DME company is to fill every request for delivery or pick-up of equipment within 24 hours," said McGillis. "Having our own company allows us to be more sensitive to family members who want hospital beds and other large items removed as soon as possible. Otherwise, as their homes fill with guests who are there to pay their respects, they have to weave around the equipment. We had very good, above-average family satisfaction with DME over the years, but we still think we can improve upon that with the new company."

Hospice Care Plus has a history of creating its own programs and services to cut expenses and improve service.

In 1997, it opened its own pharmacy to reduce costs and improve response time.

McGillis says the pharmacy "enhances collaboration, service, communication and consistency of care," and that she expects the new DME business to achieve the same results.

Hospice Care Plus was founded in 1981 in Madison County.

In 2011, the organization cared for over 1,500 individuals through its home hospice program, Palliative Care Plus, bereavement outreach services and the Compassionate Care Center facility in Richmond.

Lancasters still doing things the old way

By LISA BICKNELL
CV&T Staff Writer

Nestled at the base of a small hollow, the home of Ledford and Shirley Lancaster is surrounded by an assortment of garden plots.

Their main garden is between the front lawn and the road, but there are blackberry briars on the hill behind the house and green bean vines climbing river canes beside outbuildings.

Patches of sweet corn and large hills of watermelon promise good things to eat in upcoming weeks.

The Lancaster's son, Charles, says his parents don't let the heat keep them in the house. "Mom is out there at all hours of the day," he says.

Shirley was born at Marble Yard, and grew up in the Tipton Ridge area.

"I married Ledford in 1969 and we've been farming together at Wagersville ever since. Ledford grew up on adjoining land just up the road.

"I always did like to work," Shirley says. "When I first moved up here, we raised tobacco. I used to ride the tobacco setter by myself."

Tobacco setters typically take at least two people feeding plants through the setter at the same time.

When harvest time rolled around, the Lancasters usually did most of the harvesting by themselves too.

"I was so short, I'd let Ledford drop the sticks.

"I'd cut 800-900 sticks of tobacco a day, and we housed it by ourselves most of the time."

Until the tobacco buyout, the Lancasters raised a small tobacco crop every year.

That doesn't mean they're now idle.

"I've done more in the garden this year than I ever have," the 75 year-old Shirley says. "We raise most of what we eat."

The Lancasters have been saving and planting their own seed for decades. They not only save tomato and green bean seeds, but things like turnip seeds and cucumber seeds.

"You can save anything," she says. "We usually plant our old potatoes."

They save sweet corn seed from year to year, and they raise eight-row corn to grind for cornmeal.

To dry corn for seed, Shirley says, "Leave a few ears on the stalk until they dry up. Snap 'em off that snout and hang it up. When it's good and dry, shell it and put it in the refrigerator.

"I've got seeds I've saved for 14 years or more, and if I was to plant them, I'll bet every one of them would come up."

The Lancasters don't have air-conditioning, but that doesn't mean you'll find them sitting under a shade tree when it's hot, not if there's work to be done.

"I guess I'm kin to the Indians," Shirley says. "I like to sweat. It makes me feel good."

Her skin is so smooth, she could easily pass for someone 20 years younger.

"I don't take no medicine, and I don't go to the doctor," Shirley says. "I could be wrong, but I think that some of that ol' vegetable oil is the reason people have cholesterol and sugar problems."

Shirley still renders her own lard, and the Lancasters enjoy fresh pork every winter.

They also have a taste for wild meat, but Ledford's bad knee has hampered his ability to hunt in recent years.

"I've eat coon, squirrel, rabbit," Shirley says. "I've eat beavers, and I've made sausage out of that. I used to make groundhog sausage for his daddy. He didn't want anything in it but salt."

Although some might wrinkle their nose at eating wild meat, Shirley says,

"There's nothin' no cleaner than a beaver. They live in the water and they don't eat nothin' much.

"It's all in what people get used to."

Not only does Shirley stay busy in the garden, she keeps the place trimmed with a weedeater.

"Sometimes I'll weedeat for three hours at a time and not stop for anything but to fill it up," she says.

Although the Lancasters don't have air-conditioning, they stay cool by drinking plenty of water. In the springtime when the branch near their house runs cold and clear, they pipe water into their cistern.

"If we're savin' with it, it'll last a long time," Shirley says. They have city water but mainly use it to do laundry and flush the toilets.

Each week, Shirley takes a couple of gallons of her water to a 99-year old friend who lives down the road.

"She likes my water," she says.

"The health department would probably condemn it, but it ain't hurt us yet," she laughs.

Home canning made easy

By: Grace Viall Gray
(The following article was taken from The Irvine Times 1929. Methods of canning have changed over the years.)

Tomatoes

Tomatoes are one of the easiest of vegetables to can. They are an acid vegetable and as such do not present any of the difficulties that sometimes arise in canning the non-acid vegetables. Tomatoes are so rich in vitamins that they are quiet necessary in the diet, and fortunately retain their vitamin value after being canned. All wise homemakers will can many quarts of tomatoes for their winter menus when vitamins are not so plentiful.

For canning, use only sound, firm, ripe tomatoes. Cut off any green, unripened parts. Scald 1 1/2 to 2 minutes to loosen the skins. Putting the tomatoes in a square cheesecloth facilitates this process. Dip in cold water, core and peel. Pack in jars.

For the solid pack, pack the tomatoes whole, pressing down firmly enough to fill all air spaces; add only the juice which drains from the tomatoes during peeling and cutting. If the tomatoes are to be sold, this is the type of pack that government regulations require. Add 1 teaspoonful of salt to every quart. Seal and process.

Process means sterilize.

For the other type of pack, the irregular, broken or extra large tomatoes can be used. Scald and cold dip to remove the skins. Mash. Fill jars. Add 1 teaspoonful salt to each jar. Partially seal and process.

Tomato puree can also be made by cooking tomato pulp until it is the consistency of catsup, after which it is seasoned, strained and packed hot in jars and canned. It is all ready for use when the jars are opened.

After the jars of tomatoes and tomato puree are ready for canning, put them in the steam pressure cooker. Have boiling water almost to reach the rack in bottom of cooker. Fill cooker with jars, adjust cover by tightening clamps opposite each other. At the same time, see that all clamps are tight so no steam escapes except through the petcock. When steam comes from the petcock, close completely, and allow pressure to rise to 10 pounds. Sterilize 10 minutes at this pressure. Keep uniform pressure to prevent loss of liquid in jars.

Remove cooker from fire at the end of the processing period, and allow gauge to register zero before opening the petcock, then open gradually to prevent the loss of liquid in jars. Remove jars, completely seal, invert, cool, watch for a few days, then store in a cool, dry place.

Following a pattern, the dog days of summer arrive early

By LISA BICKNELL
CV&T Staff Writer

Whew! Is anyone besides me happy for a break from the stifling heat? Who knew that temperatures in the mid-80s could feel so refreshing?

Forecasts for hot humid weather bring with them repeated warnings to stay indoors as much as possible and drink plenty of water to avoid becoming dehydrated.

There are other risks associated with the drought that might not make the evening news.

Lots of people are seeking out swimming holes in local creeks and the river. Unfortunately, these waterways aren't as clean and clear as they appeared back in the spring.

A few days ago, my hubby and I took the canoe out for a paddle on the creek. The water looked downright nasty with a brown oily film on top of it.

Some of that is because the water is stagnant. It's so low that it isn't moving much right now.

Cattle like to stand in the creek to cool off, and, like kids in a public pool, they don't always take potty breaks.

Some of the scum on the creek comes from garbage that people dump into our streams. With water levels down, it's easier than ever to see the amount of junk that is lodged in our creeks.

We saw old tires, plastic jugs and other unidentifiable stuff lodged in driftwood. Some of it has been leaching toxins into the water for years, no doubt.

What a shame! Most of us wouldn't dream of drinking from our toilets, yet we throw anything and everything into our water supply and wonder why so many people have cancer and other dreaded diseases.

Dry conditions pose other risks. Snakes are trying to find water, and some of them are poisonous.

The other night I went out to put our chocolate lab in her kennel as I always do. I scanned the ground before me with the beam of my flashlight, ever aware that copperheads tend to crawl at night.

My dog walked through her kennel door, just a step ahead of me, then jumped sideways all of a sudden. I jumped too, wondering if she'd stepped on a snake, but I didn't see anything on the ground.

The dog was shaking her head, so I thought something might have stung her. When I moved the flashlight beam a little higher, I caught just a glimpse of what appeared to be a copperhead intertwined in the kennel fencing about two feet off the ground.

I made a bee-line for the house and yelled for Robin to get a gun. He shot the copperhead in the kennel, but, after looking around, he found two more copperheads just a few feet away! He killed those too.

It took me a while to go to sleep that night.

Our dog is ok, thank goodness, but it terrifies me to think that if I'd stepped into the kennel first as I often do, that snake might have bit me.

It appears that the dog days of summer are here early. The water is stagnant and to swim in it is to risk getting infected with something. Snakes are thirsty and appear to be striking blindly.

You can't say you weren't warned.

On to more pleasant topics...Chelsea is winding up her summer research project about Appalachian foodways. We appreciate those who have shared their stories with us.

A few people were a bit hesitant at first, apparently insecure about their lack of education. The funny thing is, though they may lack formal schooling, they know so much more than they think they do.

The phrase "sustainable living" is one that gets tossed around a lot these days. People are interested in becoming "re-skilled" and many want to know how to grow and preserve their own food.

The majority of older folks I grew up around never really stopped living a "sustainable lifestyle." They never became unskilled in the first place. They were smart enough to value the old ways of doing things, savvy enough to know that their knowledge might come in handy again.

I don't think I'd want to give up the great technological advances that our society has made for the good old days. I'll admit that I love

"Most of us wouldn't dream of drinking from our toilets, yet we throw anything and everything into our water supply."

having a world of information available at my finger tips when I sit down with my laptop.

If we had to do without technology, though, I think we could get by.

But I wonder about those who are a generation or two younger than me, many of whom have little idea where there food comes from, other than the grocery store or a fast-food lane.

Thomas Jefferson said, "I think our governments will remain virtuous for many centuries; as long as they are chiefly agricultural."

I think it's easy for a society to lose touch with reality when it forgets its dependence on the good earth and her Creator.

I'll finish my ramble with a brief update on our little Clay.

He's been home a couple of weeks now, and we couldn't have asked for a smoother adjustment to his new environment. Our little man is growing like a weed and seems just as happy to be home as we are to have him there.

That's reason to celebrate even in the dog days of summer.

ENCOURAGING WORD: CHANGE IS A REALITY OF LIFE

Howard Coop
Guest Columnist

The day, like most days, passed quickly. It was a beautiful day, and I was involved in numerous necessary and pleasant activities.

In preparation for that day, I had prepared, in some detail, a rather long to-do list, and I had carefully prioritized those things I wished to accomplish before the day ended. That two-part list consisted of some things I considered “big” and, therefore, “important.” They were first on the list. Also, that list consisted of some other things that I considered “little” and, therefore, somewhat less “important.” Of course, those things were last on the list.

At the end of a busy day, I paused for a moment to look back at the accomplishments that had been made. At once, I realized with a feeling of regret that the day had not gone exactly the way I had hoped and planned for it to go. Some of the things that I had planned to do were accomplished, but other things on my list were not accomplished. Even more regretful was the fact that among the unaccomplished items were a number of the “big” things to which I had given top priority. But as the day had gone by, it had become absolutely necessary for me to do a number of the “little” things on that list and leave some of the “big” things on it undone. As the day progressed, it became increasingly clear that what I thought was unimportant became, as a result of changing circumstances, important; therefore priorities had to be rearranged and significant adjustments had to be made.

Anatole France, the French author of the late nineteenth and early twentieth century, has been quoted as saying, “We are never two minutes the same.” Change is a reality of life. Frequently, things happen, sometimes without warning, and situations change abruptly that require major adjustments to be made and priorities to be rearranged. In a moment and for a variety of reasons, things that seemed big and important can become little and insignificant and little things can become important.

Text change states when Rate GS deposit may be waived in conjunction with taking service under Rate RS.

Kentucky Utilities Company proposes to change the text of the following electric tariffs: General Service Rate GS, All Electric School Rate AES, Power Service Rate PS, Time-of-Day Secondary Service Rate TODS, Time-of-Day Primary Service Rate TODP, Retail Transmission Service Rate RTS, Fluctuating Load Service Rate FLS, Street Lighting Service Rate ST. Although KU is not proposing to change the text of its Fuel Adjustment Clause ("FAC"), other than the correction of a minor typographical error in Paragraph (3), it is proposing to recover certain costs through the FAC to ensure that the correct amounts are collected through base rates and the FAC.
